

The Harness

Editor—Let me compliment you on your editorial, "Who Stitched the Harness?" The excesses of labor gangsterism caused it, so that it may turn out that labor will certainly not get the "green cheese in the moon" their agitators strived to have their dupes reach for, because it is not there to get under any circumstances, but they may even miss the good cheese from the milch cow they have tried so ardently to strangle for quite some time now. Talk about "killing the goose that lays the golden egg," but that has been labor's policy right along. When one can neither work, buy nor sell without the mark of these organizations from the bottom, when the "tail wags the dog," when mechanics, artisans, workers from below take over, then, according to Plato, Revelation and precedents of history, civilization perishes. Will we stop it in time?
